James Robertson was born November 2, 1857 in Ayrshire, Scotland and in 1875 came to Canada where he joined his father in farming and in the management of cheese factories and food exports to the United Kingdom. In 1896 he married Jennie Mather. Robertson was an educationist and agricultural expert. He participated in many national service organisations and chaired two royal commissions: an investigation into industrial training (1910) and an enquiry into the Sydney labour unrest of 1923. He was Dairy Commissioner for the Dominion from 1890 to 1904. From 1905 to 1910, Robertson served as Principal of Macdonald College. In 1919 he was appointed Canadian Director of Food Supplies and represented Canada on the food section of the Supreme Economic Council in Paris. Robertson received honorary LL.D. degrees from four universities (Toronto, Queen's, New Brunswick, and McGill) and was created a C.M.G. in 1905. Robertson died in 1930.
