IMMEDIATE RELEASE
27 November 1946

Joseph B. Keenan, Chief of Counsel of the International War Crimes Trial, after a conference with General MacArthur, leaves tomorrow for a brief trip to Washington. There he will discuss with President Truman, Secretary of State Byrnes, and Secretary of War Patterson, and other high officials of the United States and other nations there assembled, important matters relating to the trial proceedings.

Mr. Keenan stated that when Admiral Richardson left the stand, the prosecution completed the substance of its case against Tojo and other accused charged with planning, initiating and waging a war of aggression beginning with the Mukden incident in China and ending with Pearl Harbor. This will be supplemented by further evidence concerning the occupation by the Japanese of the Dutch East Indies, war crimes and mistreatment of prisoners of war in other occupied areas.

Mr. Keenan will return prior to the completion of the prosecution's case. He leaves by plane with Admiral Richardson, who is returning to Washington.
