

A day long meeting Tuesday, August 27th, between the Association of University and College Employees (AUCE) and the University of British Columbia negotiators has produced a suggestion from mediator Ed Sims, in an effort to avert a threatened strike during student registration week (September 4th and 5th). The suggested terms for a settlement are being considered by the University's Labour Committee and a response from the University is expected tomorrow, Thursday, August 29th. The AUCE membership will then meet to discuss the situation.
