Dear Phyllis:

In answer to your letter of April 27, 1982, I can only offer you the following suggestion - you can go to your supervisor with or without a shop steward and relay the amount of time lost to do this manual splitting job.

If this is part of job description the management does have a right to direct how work is to be done. However, it would be in their interest to have this work done in a quicker way to free you up for more important work.

This is the point you should make with them and one hopefully they will be able to identify with. I am sorry not to be more helpful with your problem.

Yours truly,
