

GERMAN TOURISTS HIT

Reich to Bring Noted Island Under Customs Territory

Berlin, December 5.—German tourists with a yen for fine foreign wines, liqueurs and cigars—duty, free—are about to lose their wave-washed "Eldorado."

The Government of the Third Reich has decided to include the small, rocky North Sea island of Heligoland in the German customs territory. The move is expected to bring only trifling increases to the German fiscal receipts.

Although the isle has belonged to Germany since 1890, when it was ceded by Great Britain in exchange for Zanzibar, off the East African coast, no customs were levied on foreign goods entering it. Expensive foreign delicacies of every variety could be obtained there at prices unheard of in the Reich. Tourists made it a chosen spot.
